-> Thousands of characters -> Automatically creates character classifications -> Complex scene configuration -> A variety of scene types -> Easily define story moments -> Insert dialog and location ScreenWriter Description: -> Thousands of characters -> Automatically creates character classifications -> Complex scene configuration -> A variety of scene types -> Easily define story moments -> Insert dialog and location Description ScreenWriter is a very simple and easy-to-use screenplay-writing program. It allows you to write different scenes of a story in one document. This is very convenient because you can edit your text without the need to save it first. It automatically creates character classifications. The text can be automatically colored by the use of color maps. These maps are built in ScreenWriter, so it allows for a nice set of colors. The system is made with an autocomplete feature that allows you to insert easily the persona that you want. The scenes can be divided by category and by location. This tool will allow you to specify the type of scene as well as the day and time where the story takes place. These settings allow you to create the flow of the text.
